Attention to formatting, organization, and professionalism can significantly impact the reception of your work by editors and publishers. This section details the best practices for preparing a polished poetry manuscript.

Formatting Your Poetry Manuscript

Formatting requirements vary slightly between publishers, but adhering to general standards ensures your manuscript appears professional. Use a standard font such as Times New Roman or Arial in 12-point size, double-space the text unless otherwise specified, and include your contact information and title page as requested. Avoid unusual layouts or excessive formatting that could distract from the poetry itself.

Organizing Your Submission

Many poetry publishers request a specific number of poems or a full manuscript for book-length submissions. Group your poems logically, often by theme or sequence, to create a cohesive reading experience. Include a brief cover letter or author bio if required, highlighting relevant publications or awards.

Poetry publishers accepting submissions in 2023 often specify the genres and styles they prefer to publish. Understanding these preferences allows poets to target the most appropriate publishers and tailor their submissions accordingly.

Traditional and Narrative Poetry
