Author Background: Richard Hooker

The question of who wrote the book MASH leads directly to Richard Hooker, the pen name of Dr. H. Richard Hornberger. As a practicing surgeon and an army veteran, Hornberger brought firsthand experience to the narrative that made M*A*S*H so authentic and compelling. Born in 1924, Hornberger served as a surgeon in a Mobile Army Surgical Hospital during the Korean War, which deeply informed his writing. His understanding of military medicine and the human side of war gave the book its distinct voice and realism.

Early Life and Military Service

Before writing the book, Hornberger completed his medical education and served in the U.S. Army during the Korean conflict. His time in the military exposed him to the chaos and absurdities of war, especially within the medical units responsible for treating wounded soldiers. These experiences became the foundation of the novel's setting and plot.

Use of the Pen Name

Richard Hooker was a pseudonym used by Hornberger to publish M*A*S*H. This allowed him to separate his professional medical career from his writing career. The process of writing the book involved combining Hornberger's own experiences with fictional elements to create a compelling narrative.
